“Like a Painting”

Eyra Moon’s new track “Where Are You Now” has recently been released as a video and song. Where Are You Now is an almost wordless video and song that invites the listener to look at it like a painting. The almost epic film music tells the story through landscapes of sound and melody that takes the listener to a whole different world.

Eyra: “In a world where we are taught to be "thinkers", instead of intuitive beings, we often forget to feel. We live in a society where we are almost constantly giving attention to what others have to say about anything. Social media, the news, school, parents, gurus. When we go to an art museum or exposition, we want to read on a card what it means, instead of looking at it and ask ourselves what do I see in it? What story pops up in my mind?

By choosing to use melody and images over words, she hopes to give space to the listener to receive their own insights.

Dream symbols

Characteristic of her videos are also the use of dream symbols. For example, the water represents emotions and clearing. “If we don't face and clear up our own demons and beliefs first, we can create problems in relation to others,” water teaches us in a dream. For the other symbols Eyra invites everyone to watch the video themselves and feel what the work has to tell you.
